PEOPLE'S TICKET.

Election, November 4th, 1884.

-FOR-

DELEGATE TO FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS,

JOHN T. CAINE.

BOLTING BLAINE.

It is gratifying to know that the really intelligent men of the Territories are right in their sentiments and actions. Since the National Republican convention in Chicago, the western papers have contained interviews and letters from many prominent and honest Republicans of the Territories, repudiating Blaine and Logan, and declaring for Cleveland and Hendricks. The latest of these is Hon. W. W. Corlett, of Cheyenne, one of the best known and most respected men of the west. He was Delegate in the last Congress from our neighbor Territory, and has always been an active and staunch Republican. The following letter shows with what feelings he contemplates the calamity of the election of the great corruptionist of the age to the Presidency. Mr. Corlett was invited to address the Cleveland and Hendricks club of Fort Collins, Colorado, and replied as follows:

CHEYENNE, WYO., Oct. 22, 1884.

F. S. Wilson, Esq., Secretary Cleveland and Hendricks Club, Fort Collins, Colo.

Dear Sir—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your telegraphic inquiry of this date, as to whether I would speak under the auspices of the Cleveland and Hendricks Club, and in reply I regret to say that the poor condition of my health renders it impossible for me to take any active part in the pending political campaign. I can only add that I believe the best interests of the country imperatively require the signal defeat of that "plumed poppycock" and historic humbug, James G. Blaine, and the triumphant election of Governor Cleveland as President. Although I have been a Republican all my life, I shall not be committed to the support of a dishonest man for chief magistrate of this country, merely because the political burglars of the party broke into its convention and feloniously carried away its goods and chattels. I sincerely hope that Colorado will array itself on the side of honest government, by contributing to the election of Governor Cleveland as President.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. W. CORLETT.

There is no question as to the size of the audience that will gather in the Theatre on Monday evening to ratify the nomination of Hon. John T. Caine; it will equal the capacity of the building; were the auditorium twice or thrice its present dimensions there would be no space to spare. But we hope the Liberals will find it convenient to make up a considerable portion of the audience. They are cordially invited and will be made welcome. They are wanted there, because the aim of the speakers of the evening will be to enlighten and instruct, and their desire naturally is to teach where learning is most needed, hence they want to talk to Liberals. If the Liberals were not so hide-bound and stubborn, but would attend the People's meetings and listen to the People's logic, they would repudiate their own platform and nominee, and support the candidate who works for the best interests of Utah. The Liberals are wanted at the Theatre on Monday evening, and if they do not appear there in force it will be because they are afraid to trust their own judgments.

Judge Zane says there was false swearing in the Connely case. If Judge Zane will examine the criminal code he will find that perjury is an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment. Judge Zane has a grand jury selected and arranged to his own taste. It is his duty, if he knows of any perjury in his court, to ask his inquisitors to present the perjurers for trial and punishment. If he does not know of any perjury he has simply taken advantage of his lofty and safe position to slander witnesses. What will Judge Zane do about it?

MR. DICKSON, the United States District Attorney, does not like THE HERALD. THE HERALD regrets this exceedingly, as it displays an inability on the part of Mr. Dickson to appreciate a good thing.

CHIEF JUSTICE ZANE protests that he is not a missionary judge. Has the chief justice ever heard it said that "actions speak louder than words?"

Wanted—A capable volunteer to notify Ransford Smith of the result on Wednesday morning.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Editors Herald—I am apprehensive that many American citizens are not posted as to the modus operandi of counting electoral votes, which precedes the inauguration of the forthcoming President of the United States. Will you kindly impart the information through your columns and oblige.

A DEMOCRAT.

Each State is entitled to as many electors as it has Senators and Representatives in Congress, and these are voted for by the people, so that the President and Vice-President are not chosen directly by the people at all; it amounts to the same thing, however, as each elector in either or any party is nominated with special reference to his party fealty and invariably represents by his vote the will of those who elect him. The voter is not confined to districts or localities, but casts a ballot containing the names of all the electors his State is entitled to, the candidates obtaining the greatest number of votes being elected, the same as other candidates for office. On the first Wednesday in December the electors who have been chosen meet at such place in their respective States as the legislatures thereof may provide, and proceed to vote first for President, then for Vice-President; three certificates of the result are made, one of them forwarded by special messenger, another mailed to the President of the Senate at Washington, and the third filed with the Judge of the District in which the electors cast their votes. On the second Wednesday in February, in the presence of both Houses of Congress, the President of the Senate announces the result of the voting by electors and officially proclaims the men having the highest number of votes duly elected as President and Vice-President. The inauguration takes place on fourth of March following—and that is all.

THE TERRITORIES.

The Territories should do the proper thing politically on Tuesday. There are eight of these dependencies, and each will elect a Delegate to the Forty-ninth Congress. Two years ago four Republicans and four Democrats were returned as duly elected Delegates. There was a contest for the seat belonging to New Mexico, and it being shown that the Republican was in the place through gross fraud, the Democratic contestant was admitted to the seat; thus five Democrats and three Republicans represent the Territories in the present Congress, as follows: Democrats, Arizona, Montana, New Mexico, Wyoming and Utah; Republicans, Idaho, Dakota and Washington. There should be a different arrangement in the Forty-ninth Congress, and we believe there will be. The Territories now represented by Democrats will undoubtedly return Delegates of the same political faith as the present incumbents, and there is also a fair prospect that a gain of one will be made. Idaho promises to redeem herself, repudiating the corruptionist and blatherskite, Singiser, and electing Honest John Hailey, a staunch, true and tried Democrat. There is no hope at present of redeeming Washington or Dakota, both of which are kept in the Republican ranks by the tempting bait of Statehood that has been held out to them by the Republican party. Two years hence, when the people of those long-suffering dependencies learn that the g. o. p. has been holding out false hopes to them, we may expect that Dakota and Washington will wheel into line, and the Territories present an unbroken Democratic front. Then will be a good time to unitedly ask admission to the Union; and the abolishment of the infamous system of Territorial government.

NEXT TUESDAY is full of growing forebodings to the federal pup-suckers in Utah. The election of Cleveland means that they will be thrown upon their own ability for a living; in other words that their existence after March 4th will be precarious.

THERE WILL be a ratification meeting in the Theatre on Monday, and don't you forget it.

Wanted—A double-extra power telescope of forty horse capability to discern the representative Gentile business men who will attend the Liberal ratification.

The time will come when blood will flow alongside the Utah ballot box.—GRANNY BANE.

ARGUMENT.

No, my son, people do not argue to get at the truth of the matter. They simply wish to make converts to their own side, though they have to lie to do it.—Boston Transcript.

Oh, happy man far down the quiet vale! Oh, hallowed home, shadowed in dreary peace, the hells of thy doorposts sprinkled with prayer, that the destroyer may pass over it, nor touch its peace with one breath from the great world beyond the encircling hills.—Barbette in Brooklyn Eagle.

CONTENT.

Rain! 't is use to grumble and complain; 't is just as cheap and easy to rejoice; When God sends out the weather and sends rain.

Why, rain's my choice.

PRAISE AND CENSURE.

Few persons have sufficient wisdom to prefer censure which is useful to them, to praise which deceives them.—(In Rochefoucauld.

OGDEN FLASHES.

MILTON NOBLES at the Opera House on the 10th.

THE Second Ward Dramatic Association appear in Mand's Peril at the Firemen's Hall to-night.

CANNON & SONS announce that they are closing out their stock of goods at greatly reduced prices.

ALBERT C. DOSCHER, the unfortunate man who was drowned in Ogden River Friday evening, will be buried Sunday.

THE final accounts in the estate of Jos. Skein were settled yesterday, and a distribution of the estate made by the Probate Court.

THE RALLY of the People's party last night drew out a larger crowd than has ever before been seen at a public demonstration in this city.

ALTHOUGH TRAVEL over all the railroads is decreasing at a fearful rate, the trains on the Utah Central are usually crowded with passengers.

AS the momentous day of election draws nigh the betting population of Ogden are subsiding, and but very few new wagers on the result are being made.

THE Broom, under Major Beardsley's management, is constantly crowded, and the traveling public unite in pronouncing it the best conducted hotel on the coast.

THE MEMBERS of the Ogden police force are having a protracted holiday. Offenders are becoming so rare in moral Ogden that the police will soon become a useless member of the municipal machinery.

A RUMOR is prevalent on the streets that one of Ogden's business men had discovered a rich vein of gold. The party referred to, on being asked in regard to the matter, stated that the report was entirely without foundation, and although he would not seriously object to being suddenly made a bonanza king, but that fickle fortune had not been generous enough to favor him with such an unusual streak of good luck.

A HORRIBLE MYSTERY.

The Terrible Revenge of an Inate Parent.

"Kiss me again." Tender and true were the eyes that looked so trustfully into those of Richard Irwin as these words were spoken, and as he gazed long and lovingly into their liquid depths there came to him with terrible force the realization of how much this girl had suffered, how much she had given up, and how much she was yet to undergo for his sake.

They had been married but two days, these two, and their story was the old, old one that most priceless treasure—the pure and passionless love of a true and noble woman—being bestowed upon one whose social status was beneath that of her, whom the mysterious and potent influence of an unchanging affection had drawn to his side. Gladys Hathaway was a girl of feature and beautiful of form, and since the day when her mother—dying almost at the moment of her greatest joy—had placed in her husband's arms the tiny waif of humanity whose entrance into the world had been the cause of so much sorrow and told him to guard and cherish it for her sake, she had been alike the joy and idol of her father.

Love could suggest and wealth procure had been lavished upon her, and when, like some fair flower of the Orient, she had grown almost unconsciously from a tall, sly girl into a woman whose statuesque beauty was not more attractive than the queenly poise of her regal head and the soft, winning tones of her voice, there had come to her father's heart the fact that her father, strong in the pride of ancestry, would never consent to their union, she had boldly leaped the barriers of social prejudice and fled from home and friends and kindred with a man without whose loving words and clinging kisses her life held naught but desolation and sorrow.

"Here is the paper, sweetheart," said Roscoe.

She glanced down the columns carefully, when suddenly her eye fell upon something of absorbing interest. It was an article concerning her elopement—the sensation of the day. On and on she read, until suddenly the peachy cheeks grew white with a ghastly pallor, the luminous eyes were dim with the mists of sorrow, and the lines of her beautiful cameo face were tense with agony.

"My darling!" exclaimed Roscoe, taking her in his arms, "what has happened?"

"Papa has been interviewed," she gasped between the convulsive sobs that almost choked her utterance, "and he has taken an awful revenge."

"What has he done?" asked her husband.

"He has," exclaimed the girl, "given my exact age!"

Representative men of the People's party will throng the stage on Monday night; a rousing audience will listen to some convincing speeches.

The corner stone of the platform upon which stands the people's candidate is local self government; the only plank in the Liberal platform calls for the most oppressive and tyrannical special legislation. Freemen, choose.

Every band in the city should don its uniform on Tuesday and devote its energies to drawing men to the polls.

An Intelligent Washer Woman.

A certain young lady left the house where she boards in this city for a day's visit to the country, and as it was Monday she left directions with the lady of the house to give the washerwoman her week's washing when she called. The washing was done up in a newspaper, and that was the only bundle of the kind in the room, so there could be no mistake.

On her return in the latter part of the afternoon she discovered that her washing had not been taken. Furthermore, there appeared to have been trouble in the house and the sulphurous odor of profanity prevailed the atmosphere.

A young man who occupied a room on the floor below her was raving up and down, vainly seeking for a costume which he had hired for a masquerade party on that night. She heard him declare that he had left it in his room rolled up in a newspaper; that it was gone, and he was just $25 and a good time out by the loss of it. The young lady immediately tumbled to the state of things. Her washerwoman had gone into the wrong room and taken the suit instead of the bundle of soiled clothes. She volunteered this explanation to the young man, and he agreed to escort her to the house of the offending washerwoman and recover the property.

The house was found after considerable search, but no one appeared to be home. They pounded the door of the little hut—it was some distance out of the city—but got no reply. At length they walked around to the back door, and there in the yard they saw to their horror the costume suspended from a clothesline, having been washed and hung out to dry. It had lost its original brightness, and not only this, but its original size. It had been intended for a man six feet high, and had shrunk in the wash till it wouldn't go on a small boy. The colors had run together, and plumes and spangles were in the last stages of dilapidation from contact with the scrubbing boards. An exclamation that was almost an oath burst from the young man's lips, but just at that moment the washerwoman appeared at the door.

"Oh, what did you do it for? Didn't you know better? What did you think I could do with those things?" exclaimed the young lady. "Now, you don't say?" was the reply. "Ain't they yours? I thought they were the queerest-looking underclothes I ever did see, but you can't tell nothing about fashions—now-a-days, and—"
